About me:

I am a PhD student at the National University of Political Studies and Public Administration - Bucharest, Romania, my areas of interest are international relations and affairs, conflict management, diplomacy and negotiations. My research focuses on the analysis and transposition of US foreign policy instruments under the auspices of President Donald Trump and how they will intervene in US relations with Middle Eastern states and international organizations, to analyze whether policy decisions will have consequences on the areas such as politics and foreign affairs, international political economy, military interventions, security and intelligence studies and human rights. I also have a Bachelor's degree in Political Science from the University of Bucharest (Dissertation: NATO Intervention in the Management of International Conflicts. Case Study: Libya) and a Master's Degree in International Relations and European Studies (Dissertation: The Implications of the European Union in the Middle East .Case Study: The Arab-Israeli War).
